MISSOULA –

Three University of Montana faculty members will discuss the history, art and economic development of Latin America during the second annual Community Lecture Series starting Tuesday, Feb. 8, at UM.

The six-part series titled "Latin America: Continuity and Change" will take place on consecutive Tuesday evenings at 7 p.m. in the newly constructed North Lecture Hall, an underground facility adjacent to the Urey Lecture Hall.

Associate Provost and history Professor John "Fritz" Schwaller will begin the series with lectures on the historic development of Latin America, including the history of the church in society.

Art Associate Professor Rafael Chacon will follow with two lectures on modern art in Latin America. The series will close with lectures on economic development and emerging democracies in the region by political science Associate Professor Paul Haber.

Regents Professor Paul Lauren of UM's history department will moderate the series. Lauren lectured on human rights and the world today in the inaugural Community Lecture Series last year.
